

Lemolo Lake, OR

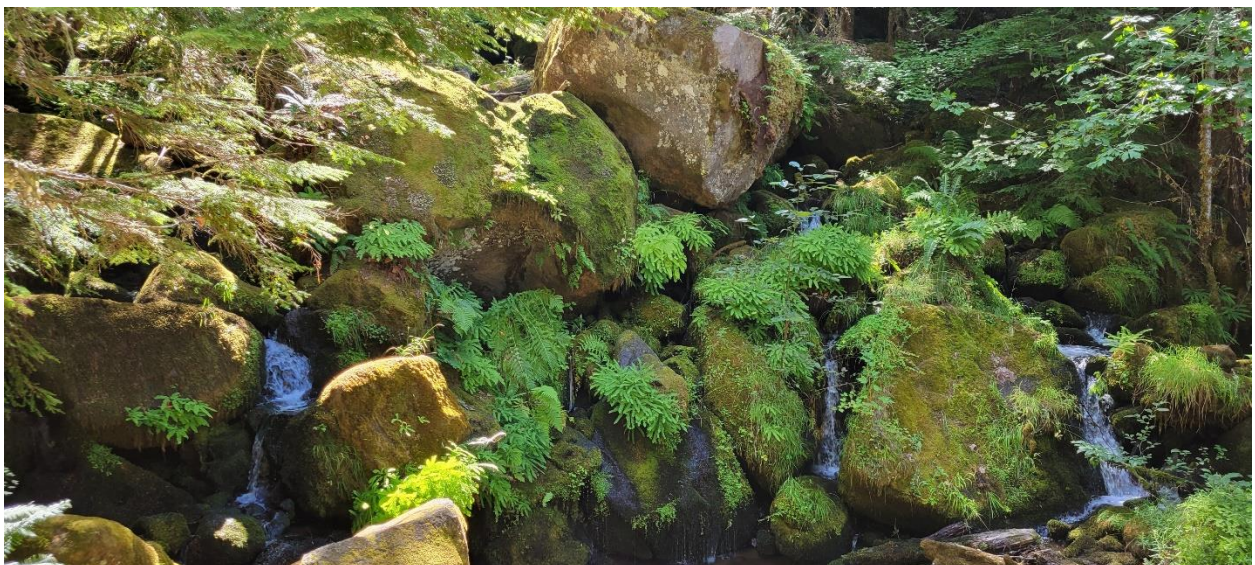

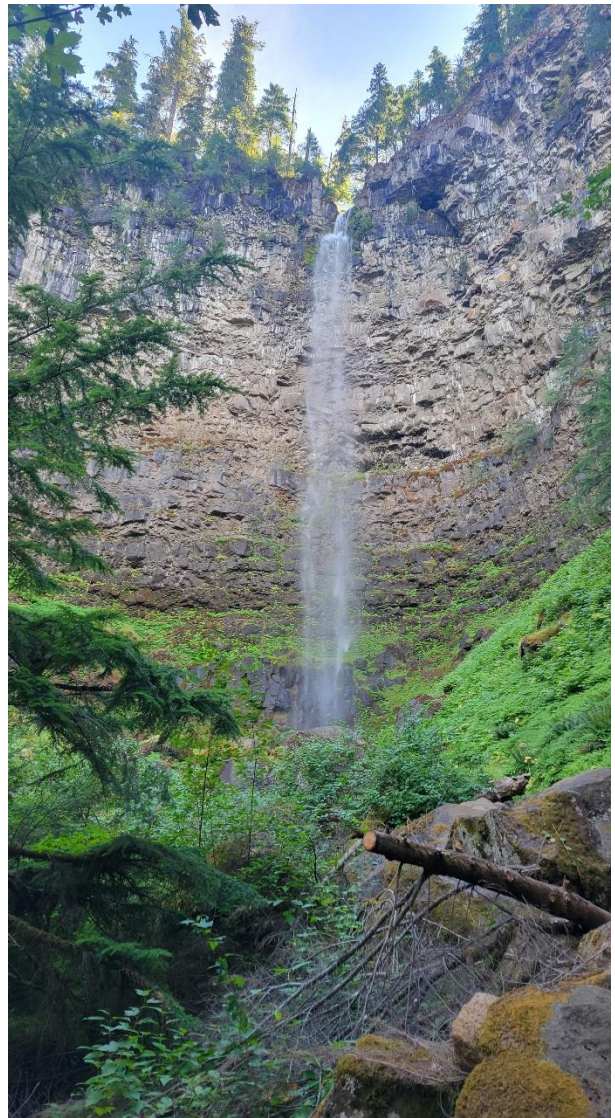

There are many waterfalls in this part of Oregon, so we set out to see some of them. The hike to the second waterfall was only about ½ mile, however the 200 feet of elevation gain left Kai's knee a little bit worse for the wear. Several hiking paths to waterfalls were closed due to fire. We saw a lot of areas that had been scorched over the last couple of decades but were all in different phases of recovery.

Then we stopped at the closest general store, 35 miles from Lemolo Lake and since we came this far we continued to Steamboat Inn to check it out. This was such a beautiful drive!

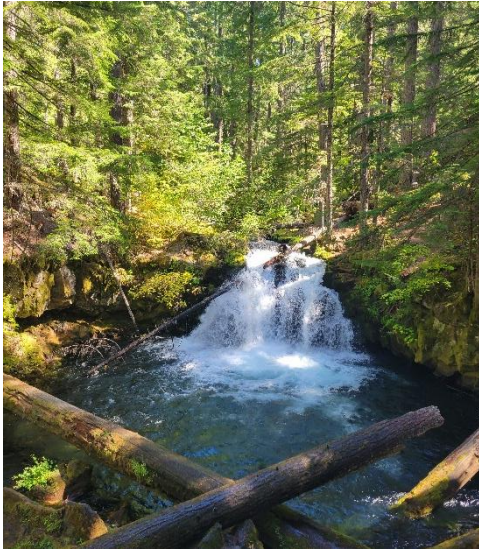

When we got back, we took the dogs out for a walk along one of the many paths near the RV park and let them swim in the lake before a bath. These paths are mostly used by ATVers and snowmobilers, so they are wide, fairly clear with little elevation change and since we are in between seasons, empty.
